'New library, post office slated for Sunset Center' - Laiolo

Barring any unforeseen problems, it would seem a foregone conclusion that both the Post Office and the Harrison Memorial Library will be moved to Sunset Center, according to statements by newly re-elected Mayor Barney Laiolo.

Laiolo told the Pine Cone that he looked forward to the completion of the master plan for Sunset Center, San Carlos and Eighth, during the next two years. This master plan includes provisions for moving the post office and library as soon as it is feasible.

Federal officials are scheduled to visit Carmel "in the very near future", to examine potential sites," Laiolo said. "The Sunset location is the only place in Carmel the post office found which is large enough to take care of their needs", Laiolo said.

The mayor then discussed tentative building and design plans for the new post office. The building would be constructed by private interests, and then the City would secure a ground lease based on a 20-year plan, with six five-year renewals. As it stands now, the property would belong to the city at the expiration of the leases in 50 years.

Government architects would work with local architects in the design of the structure. "One of the provisions we seek is that the building be suitable for later city use and compatible with the existing style of architecture", the mayor said.

Parking for 100 cars would be available on two levels on the Mission Street side of the proposed structure.

Income from the ground lease and taxes would provide additional revenue for the city, the mayor said. "Right now, all we are getting out of Sunset Center is costs", he declared.

Turning to the question of moving the Harrison Memorial Library, the mayor said that architects are "standing by", and that any further plans are being held in abeyance until plans for the post office are completed. Both projects would be undertaken at the same time to avoid problems of traffic flow and possible design clashes.

"We do not contemplate tearing down the present library building", the mayor declared. "There are several alternatives for use of the present structure. It could become a joint City Hall and Community Center, and could house a museum of city history", Laiolo said. "The library has many things in storage now that could be exhibited in a proper museum, if we had one", he said.

This would also put the present property back on the tax rolls; the city would realize income from a ground lease or sale, he said.

The mayor brushed aside any legal problems that would arise from moving the library. Bill Pentony, a local realtor, has indicated, after studying old city records, that he interpreted the wording of the original deed to mean that the Harrison Memorial Library could not be moved. Laiolo said that he had "checked this out two years ago", and that the deed did not limit the city to a library at a specific location. "The only restriction", he said, "was that the Harrison Memorial Library be located within the city limits."

Postmaster says "no" to mailbox at Sunset Center

William Woolsey, Assistant Postmaster-in-Charge of Carmel, has advised the Carmel City Council that he cannot recommend placing a mail collection box at the Sunset Cultural Center on San Carlos and Eighth.

The Council requested the relocation of a box at the Sunset complex after Theodore Curtis submitted a petition bearing 180 names asking for a collection box across from the post office. The Council decided after study that a box there would cause traffic problems so they sent the Post Office the alternate proposal of the Sunset location.

Woolsey said, in a letter rejecting the proposal, that since Carmel has no letter carriers a dispatch clerk makes collections from the three boxes now in service and "that slows down the distribution of the out-going mail as the dispatch crew, which is on a tight schedule, has to operate one man short in his absence."

As the collection boxes now stand, Carmelites must travel within 2½ blocks of the post office to mail a letter.

The dispatch clerk makes the collections on foot from the three boxes clustered along Ocean Avenue between Lincoln and San Carlos.

It would take an additional 10-minute round trip for this same clerk to detour to Sunset Center to make an additional collection to serve the residents of that area. Woolsey told the PINE CONE that those ten minutes were "critical", and that it would further delay the processing of outgoing mail.

The City Council has decided not to pursue the matter.

AUTOMOTIVE HISTORY:

It isn't. But there are these cars around Carmel:

A wildly decorated VW bus with vivid curtains drawn across each window, and across the back this painted warning: "Don't laugh. Your daughter may be in here."

The driver: a pretty young woman with an out-of-sight hairdo, a big fashionable hat, a mink stole -- the whole scene. The vehicle: an ancient paint-chipped, fender, bent truck.

Parked in a residential driveway, a car with this bumper strip: "More Brotherhood, Less Motherhood." Inside the home, a baby shower in progress.

Outsize station wagon jammed with children and an immense dog. And what passenger is leaning over the mother-driver's shoulder demanding love pats? A charming white baby goat!

Laiolo re-elected mayor, city council seated

Barney Laiolo was re-elected Mayor of Carmel Tuesday night by the newly seated City Council. He will serve a two-year term.

Bernard Anderson and Ken Brown, the two Councilmen chosen by the voters in last week's city election, were sworn in and seated for their four-year terms.

Two other items were included on the agenda for this organizational meeting: the appointment of heads of commissions and committees by the mayor; and the resignation of Hugh Bayless as City Clerk.

In accordance with the results of last week's vote on Proposition I, the city clerk and city treasurer will now be appointed by the Council, instead of being elected directly by the voters. Bayless, elected in 1968 as city clerk, still has two years to serve. He tendered his resignation, however, at Tuesday's meeting, and announced that he was a candidate for the position as a Council appointee.

Action on the resignation and appointment was held over until the first business meeting of the Council, which is scheduled for Wednesday, May 6.

City Treasurer John Rennels, who was not present at the meeting, has already indicated he intends to serve out the remaining two years of his term. At this writing, it appears that he does not intend to resign.

Asked by the PINE CONE about his plans for the coming two years, the mayor said he looked forward to "the completion of the master plan for Sunset Center." (See other story on this page.)

Career turning point came when Carmel author began reading 'for pleasure'

Beverly Cleary, Carmel authoress of children's books, will be at the Magic Fishbone bookstore, Mission & Fifth, this Saturday for an autograph party for her new book Runaway Ralph. The party will last from two until five o'clock.

Ralph, the hero of the new book, is a small brown mouse who has a series of adventures and close calls when he runs away on a mouse-sized motorcycle. He goes to a summer camp for boys and girls, where he hopes to find crumbs dropped from peanut-butter-and-jelly sandwiches, but instead ends up in a cage doing endless "loop the loops" on an exercise wheel. A lonely boy named Garf befriends Ralph, and soon they discover they speak the same language.

Runaway Ralph is an hilarious adventure story with something important to say about running away. The PINE CONE asked Mrs. Cleary if she set out to write a message into her books.

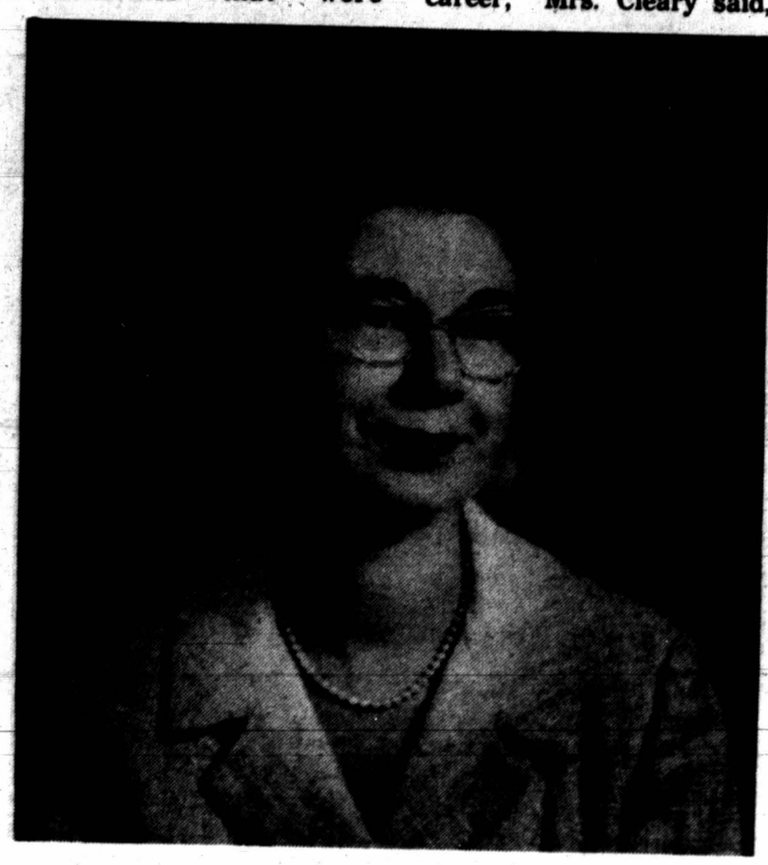
"I don't write to give a message", she said. "My books tell stories and are funny."

She has written 20 children's books starting with the Henry Huggins series more than 20 years ago. Her latest two books have both featured Ralph, the daredevil mouse, and they are her first fantasies.

Beverly Cleary was born in a small town in Oregon, but her family moved to Portland where she grew up. She graduated from the University of California at Berkeley, then entered the School of Librarianship at the University of Washington. In 1939 she became Children's Librarian in Yakima, Wash. In 1940 she married Clarence T. Cleary, and moved to Oakland. She was Post Librarian during World War II, at the Oakland Army Hospital. Two years ago the Clearys, with their twins, a boy and a girl, moved to Carmel.

Mrs. Cleary said that she grew up reading fairy tales and fantasies; most of the children's books available at the time were about very wealthy English children or very poor and humble children waiting for a break - - themes that were "ridiculously irrelevant" to a middle class American child.

"A turning point in my career," Mrs. Cleary said, "came when I began to read for pleasure rather than as a chore. Now I write my books so they'll be funny and fun to read."



BEVERLY CLEARY

The Cleary books are created for young readers, such as Mrs. Cleary was, who are looking for pleasant stories that are relevant to today's children.

Her books have been translated into several foreign languages and are especially popular in Scandinavia. One of her books, "15" is used in Belgium to teach French - speaking children how to read English.

Perhaps most satisfying of all, she has won many awards voted by children. Next week Mrs. Cleary will go to Athens, Georgia, to accept an award for Ramona and the Pest. In Kansas, 96,000 children voted, and Mrs. Cleary won the William Allen White Award.

The last two books about Ralph the mouse and his motorcycle seem to be especially attractive to boys. She got the idea for the new fantasies while visiting England with her family. One night in a particularly spooky old hotel, her son awoke with 104 degrees of fever; he was quite sick and had to stay in bed for several days, so Mrs. Cleary gave him some small toys to play with. She noticed that while he played with the toys he "seemed in another world."

When they returned to this country, she saw a small mouse in a bucket, and it occured to her that he was the size for her son's toys. She set out to write a fantasy of a mouse and miniature toys and placed the setting in California because she felt her grasp of the English dialogue was inadequate.

The sequel, Runaway Ralph, "grew out of many winter hours spent watching a mouse and a hamster tread around in cages on her kitchen table," she says.

Mrs. Cleary has no works in progress, but she has some ideas for stories which she, like many writers, is reluctant to discuss.

Art Museum fate uncertain, building is up for sale

Last week Carmel's voters had their say in deciding the fate of the Carmel Museum of Art. In its proposal to the City, the Museum Board stated last January that: "a group of concerned citizens formed together and created the Carmel Museum of Art ... to specifically preserve this aspect of our history, and to make it available to the people, free of charge, so that they might be informed and therefore better understand the foundations of their community and its evolution ...

"The continuing maintenance of the Museum, by these concerned citizens could not, strictly on the basis of financial support, continue indefinitely, and it has come to the point where, unless some public support is found, all the work and effort will go for nought."

But the voters overwhelmingly decided that the City should not take on operation of the Museum. The vote was 1220 to 161.

Rejection at the polls has left the Museum's future uncertain. The building must be sold to satisfy creditors; the collection will be either stored or loaned, possibly to an Oakland museum, until suitable accommodations in Carmel become available.

The Museum has, for some time, been fighting an uphill battle against expenses. From January 1969 to the end of September, it showed a net loss of $25,805.60.

The collection with an unappraised value set by the Museum at $61,000 is located on Dolores between Seventh and Ocean in a Mediterranean style structure. The building retains a note payable to the Wells Fargo Bank for $77,000 with accounts payable for improvements for $20,000.

The Museum offered to the people its collection and building at no cost, and professional staff. In return the City was to have assumed operation of the institution on a permanent basis; judging from last year's experience, such an operation would cost the City at least $25,000 annually.

Mayor Laiolo said of the Museum that the City "just plain can't afford the $25,000 a year investment to keep it going," a feeling the voters reflected in the ballot box.

Robert Ross, a Carmel realtor and president of the Museum Board told the Pine Cone that there are several potential buyers for the building that must be sold to fulfill obligations to creditors; Museum operations will be "scaled down" until funds are available for a fuller schedule.

In a letter to the members of the Museum, Kent Seavey, curator of the museum, said: "Museum activities ... will continue. In terms of output that activity will concern itself with research and a continuation of our oral history project. In terms of you, our members, it will continue with our existing programs of films, lectures, publications, as they are prepared, and trips to outside institutions exhibiting the art of California and the West. Hopefully exhibitions will be planned and executed periodically in local galleries and art centers so that the purely visual aspect of our work may be maintained."

According to Mr. Seavey, the Museum will use Carmel's Village Theatre facilities for some of its programs.

Sewer Board gives outfall approval

Preliminary approval for a sewage outfall in Carmel Bay was given this week by the board of the Carmel Sanitary District. The outfall, when finished, will provide 1,000-to-1 diffusion of sea water to effluent by the time the effluent reaches the shore from the end of the 600-foot outfall," according to Kennedy Engineers, consultants to the District.

Approval was necessary to obtain bids on the project and to pave the way for a federal grant.

Studies of currents also shows that the effluent will be carried into deep water from the outfall, rather than toward the shoreline, according to the engineering firm.

Responding to a question from one board member, the consultants agreed that secondary treatment was the ultimate goal, but that it was "a question of time and money."

Carmel schools bus yard to Middle School

The maintenance garage and parking area for Carmel school buses will be located behind Middle School.

The Carmel school board took final action on the controversial bus compound last night, approving the Middle School site by a 4 to 0 vote. Trustee Steven H. Sassoon was out of town and did not vote. The bus yard is now located on the Carmel High School grounds.

To make the record clear once and for all, the board also rescinded the action it took last December recommending that the bus garage be constructed on a two-acre site adjacent to Carmelo School in Carmel Valley.

The final decision came after weeks of discussion about traffic patterns, noise, visual impact, distance travelled and security at various locations. The board's initial choice of Carmelo School ran into staunch opposition from the County Planning Commission, the Carmel Valley Property Owners Association and, last week, the Lower Advisory Committee.

The board had then agreed to go along with a suggestion by the County Road Department that they both construct maintenance facilities in Roach Canyon, next to Del Mesa Carmel, in Carmel Valley. Conservationists fought this plan, and the proposition was eventually turned down by the County Board of Supervisors.

Superintendent of Schools Harris Taylor said last night that architects have completed the basic design for the building, and will now begin planning access roads, drainage facilities and other specifics necessary for the Middle School location.

Construction will start as soon as possible, in hopes the bus compound will be in operation by the opening of school in September. The estimated cost of the project is $100,000, which will be taken from general operating funds.

Toggery to be sold at auction Tuesday

All the merchandise, fixtures and furnishings of the Toggery, a dress shop on the corner of Seventh and Mission in Carmel, will be sold at public auction on Tuesday, April 28.

The sale will be conducted by Robert P. Walter, revenue officer for the Internal Revenue Service.

Monies raised during the sale will be used to help satisfy the government's claims of $81,000 in back taxes against Mrs. Barbara Jackson, owner of the Toggery.

The store has been padlocked for two weeks and all the assets seized.

Included in the property to be auctioned is the Toggery's inventory of wearing apparel, valued at $35,000 at retail prices. Also slated for sale under the auctioneer's gavel are all the store's fixtures and merchandise racks, all furnishings, and all office equipment.

Walter said the property will be offered to bidders first "in the aggregate." This means that if an acceptable bid is received for all the property, including merchandise, furnishings and fixtures, a single buyer could buy everything at once.

If this is not done, the property will be auctioned in groups as follows: Group I -- all wearing apparel and accessories; Group II -- all store fixtures, racks, etc.; Group III -- all furnishings, including divans, chairs, lamps, etc.; Group IV -- office furnishings and equipment, including desks, file cabinets, typewriters, addressing equipment, etc.; and Group V -- miscellaneous items, includuding music system radio receiver.

If single buyers are not found for whole groups, the property will be sold by lot within groups, or individual items, at the seller's option.

Inspection of the property, for interested buyers, will be permitted on Monday, April 27, 3:00-5:00 p.m. and Tuesday, April 28, 9:00-10:00 a.m., just prior to the sale.

Mr. Walter told the Pine Cone the sale would be cancelled at any time until the actual auction begins if payment in full is made for the back taxes owed.

The building and realty, also owned by Mrs. Jackson, will also be sold "in the near future", according to Mr. Walter.

PLAN ADDITIONS AT ALL SAINTS EPISCOPAL SCHOOL

All Saints' Episcopal Day School in Carmel Valley is planning to add a large multipurpose room, a small chapel and an office to the main school building.

The Rev. Peter Farmer, headmaster of the school, said he hopes construction of the new facilities will be completed by September. He said the additional space will be needed then because the school plans to add an eighth grade class, increasing its enrollment from 104 students to approximately 120.

The multipurpose room, which will be used for visual aids, folk dancing and crafts, and the chapel will be added at the east end of the existing school building, facing Carmel Valley road. The new office will be built at the west end of the school, expanding the cramped space now shared by Rev. Farmer and the school secretary.

Rev. Farmer explained that the small chapel, or oratory, will be designed for private meditation or use by small groups. When a church service is to include all the students, the school will be able to use the sanctuary of the Lutheran Church across the road, or the nearby First Baptist Church. Both churches have allowed the day school to use their premises in the past.

Drawings for the new rooms have just been completed by the architects, Wallace Holm & Assoc. of Monterey. The school expects to put the project out for bids right away.

The school will apply for a use permit for the construction at the April 29 meeting of the County Planning Commission. The rooms to be added were all included in the use permit approved when the school was first built.

'THE GUITAR IS A BLESSING AND A CURSE...'

A love affair with the guitar and Carmel

BY JUDITH A. EISNER

Grand passions are always fascinating. Romeo and Juliet's tragic love, Madame Curie's selfless scientific determination, Van Gogh's tortured genius struggling to find expression and Hillary's impassioned assault on Mt. Everest all have in common a burning desire, a total absorption and an all-consuming love for their goal.

Carmel's C. Ivan Maracle is such a man, for he is engaged in a life-long love affair with the classic guitar.

The guitar is the most popular musical instrument in America today. Its popularity is due, in part, to the fact that guitars--although never fine ones--are inexpensive, they are portable and anyone can learn to play some kind of music very quickly. Thus, the guitar has become the voice of folk and rock music across the land.

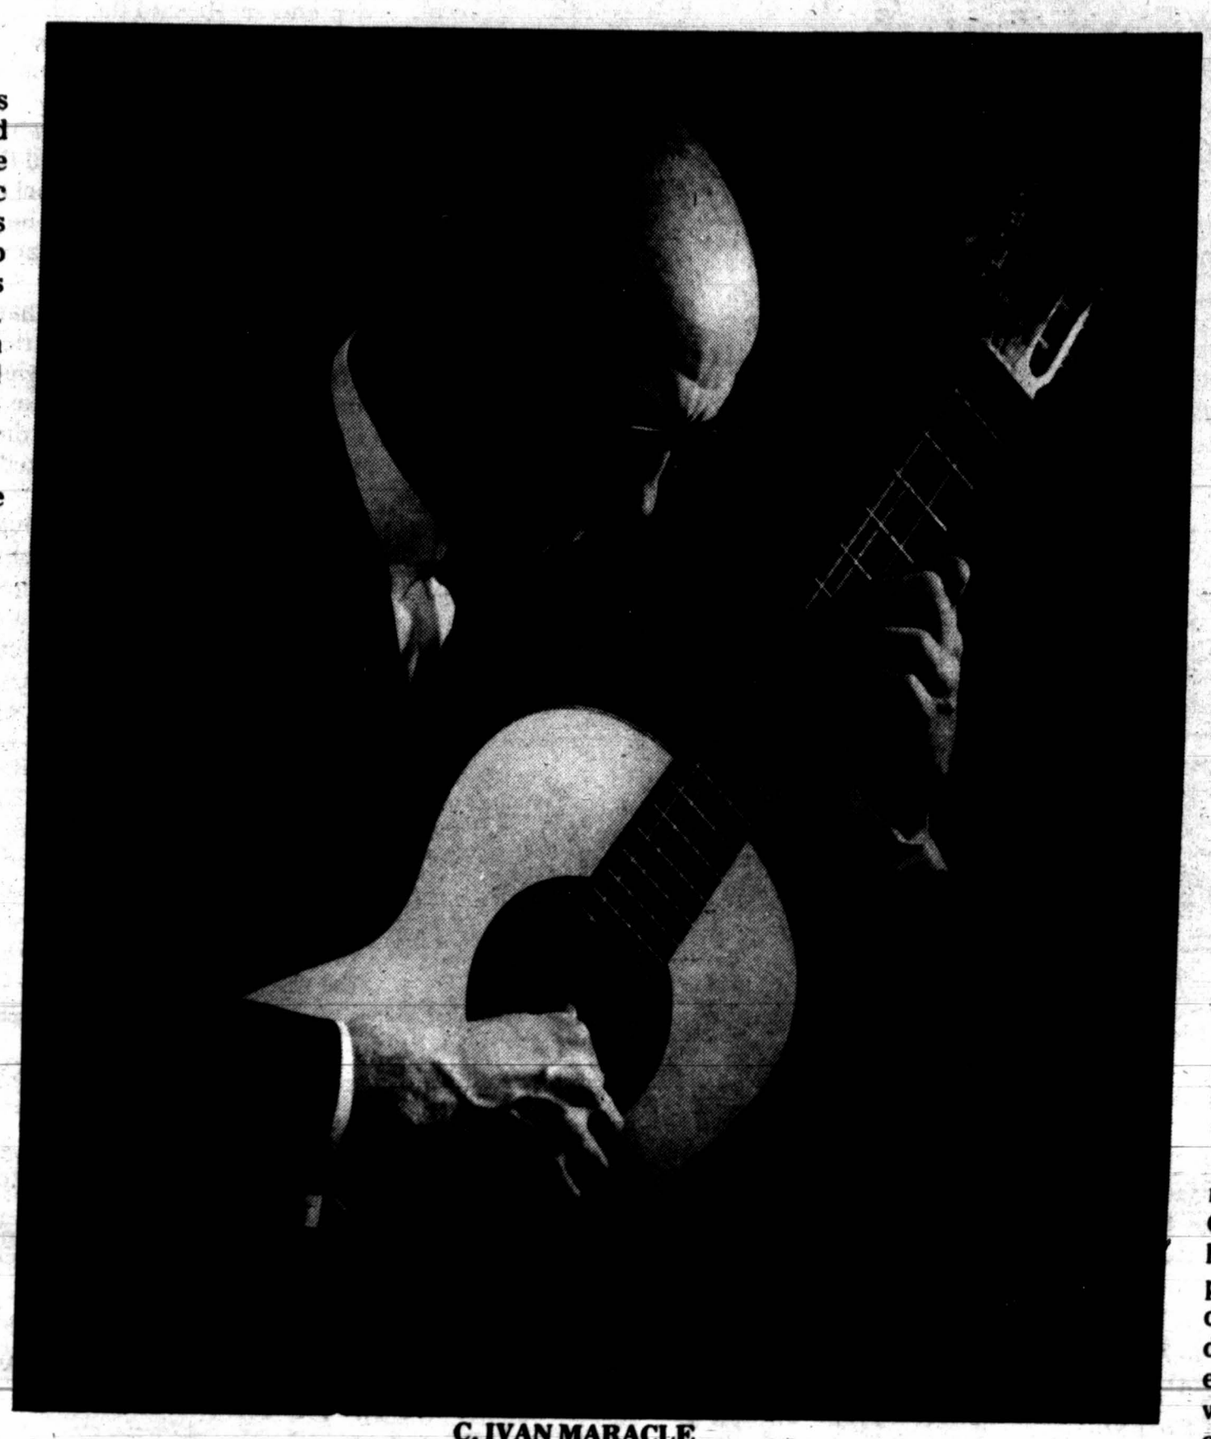
"The guitar," says Ivan Maracle, "is a blessing and a curse. It's a blessing because it's very easy to pick up; and it's a curse in that you can spend the rest of your life learning to master the classic guitar."

Classic guitar is as it has been played for hundreds of years. It is played on an instrument that always has nylon strings and that, ideally, is constructed of fine quality hardwoods, especially Brazilian rosewood, to produce richness, depth and resonance of tone.

All the uses to which the guitar is put today -- folk, jazz, rock -- are impure versions of classical guitar. Classical guitar is, in other words, concert guitar and, as Maracle puts it, basic, fundamental guitar. It was played by Berlioz, Schubert, Paganini and Saint-Saëns, to name but a few musical greats, and by Ben Franklin, Mary Queen of Scots and Henry VIII.

"Flamenco, folk and jazz guitar are all idioms or offshoots of basic classical guitar," says Maracle, "and people can play better folk or jazz guitar by learning classical." It is like learning to walk in order to learn to dance.

The Canadian-born, 47 year old Maracle tells of his introduction to the guitar with warmth and humor. His boyhood dream had been to play the trumpet, a "nice, loud, satisfying sound." But the doctor forbade such studies and his mother, who Maracle calls "a talented player who never realized her potential on the guitar," dragged him, with obvious delight, to a Toronto department store. There they bought a $15 guitar and a 25c booklet that promised to teach the guitar in five minutes.



C. IVAN MARACLE

This was in 1938, and by good fortune, young Ivan heard a national broadcast of Vincente Gomez playing the classical guitar. His astonished reaction to this concert was, "Why, he's got five or six guys playing with him!"

Shortly thereafter, in the music department of another store, Ivan passed a booth in which a man was playing the guitar. "I didn't knock or anything. I'm not sure I even opened the door." Suddenly, I was just in that room." There, playing "just like on the radio," sat Clarke Russell. This was Maracle's introduction to the classical guitar and the 15 year old boy began lessons with Russell immediately.

Changes were occurring in Ivan's plans. He wanted to become a doctor, but by the age of 18, he also realized that he wanted to teach classical guitar. He recalls that he had no interest in performing; he wanted to teach this marvelous instrument, to share its curses and blessings" with others.

Ivan's father was a practical man. He agreed to help his son become a doctor, but he also insisted that he learn a trade, "just in case." Himself a printer, he taught Ivan his trade and at 19 the boy was a journeyman printer. By then, in the early 1940's, war had come and somehow, Ivan's medical ambitions were never realized. For a while he gratefully acknowledged his father's wisdom when he was forced to work as a printer, but soon he was studying music seriously.

In addition to his studies with Russell, Maracle has studied piano, theory, harmony and conducting at the University of Toronto Conservatory of Music. This school now offers a 10-year course in classical guitar, but Ivan says, "If I had walked through that door with a guitar then, they'd have thrown me out." He studied further with such well-known teachers as Anatole Malukoff, Sophocles Papas and, most important, with Aaron Shearer who is now Chairman of Guitar at the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore.

Maracle speaks of Shearer with great reverence, for it was Shearer who first went into the scientifics of teaching the guitar. "The major problem in playing the guitar is one of uncontrolled muscular tension," says Maracle, "and it was Shearer who first studied the importance of correct anatomical positioning and then wrote all this down for the world to use."

The maestro has been teaching for 22 years, and for most of those years he has been choral director and voice coach as well. Most of his choral work has been done on the East Coast, where he has organized concert choirs in Washington, D.C., Richmond, Va. and Orlando, Fla. His last such position, from which he retired in July, 1969, was in Mountain View, Calif. He is currently on the staff of the Peninsula Conservatory of Music in Burlingame.

Surprisingly, Maracle discovered the beauties of Carmel quite recently. He first came here in 1968 to visit a charming lady, who was soon to become his wife. Martha had lived here, on and off, since 1946 and it was she who showed him The Guitar Shop. This warm, beautiful place, in Pantiles Court on Dolores Street, is a guitar shop, not a music store as Ivan is quick to point out. "It is a place dedicated to the guitar." As such, The Guitar Shop, where teaching comes first and sales second, handles only good quality instruments. "You can't buy a decent guitar for under $60 as an absolute minimum," says Maracle, glancing lovingly at his $2,000 custom made guitar. "I was shocked to learn, he continues, that Japanese are now making some of the finest guitars in the world. Once it was the Spanish, Mexicans and Germans; but the Japanese have set their minds to it and they're turning out some marvelous guitars."

Ivan and Martha took over the shop in July, 1969 and now spend four days a week in Carmel and the remainder up north in Burlingame and Menlo Park. "As far as I'm concerned, physically and mentally, there's nothing I'd rather do than live and teach in Carmel," says Ivan. But, with a true teacher's dedication he says he feels a great responsibility to his students up north and cannot in good conscience leave them.

Ivan and Martha rent a big roomy house on the beach in Carmel and, upon returning here each week, happily park their car and don't drive again until they must depart. Ivan finds it exhilarating just to be able to walk the lovely streets of our city.

They have a unique plan for their big beach-front home this summer. Ivan is offering an intensive guitar seminar to selected students. These students will come to live with the Maracles for a week as house guests. The plan is for days of total immersion in the guitar, broken only by meals and two daily walks on the beach -- the first at 5 a.m. There will be two lessons a day with the maestro, and more than 6 hours of practice!

Ivan, who uses the Shearer method in his teaching, guarantees that he can teach anyone to play the guitar if they do exactly what he says! He is proud that his lessons are geared to meet the prerequisites for entrance into the Peabody Conservatory of Music.

Of course, Maracle teaches women as well as men, but he has no patience for teachers who permit their female students to alter the basic, correct playing position. "My female students have to play like men and they have to wear slacks to do it," he states emphatically. "Some teachers let the girls play with the guitar resting on their crossed legs...impossible!"

Along with strict adherence to the basic rules, Maracle shows his dedication by providing a 24-hour "hot line" on which troubled students can reach him at all times. "That way," he says "there's no excuse for their getting stuck with a problem." The maestro expects all his students to show constant progress, with allowances made only for injury or sickness. "It's a very real excuse not to practice when a guitarist cuts a finger," he adds.

Asked if age is a consideration in learning to play the guitar, Maracle laughs. "My youngest student,"--one of Bing Crosby's sons, incidentally -- "is eight years old and my eldest is 64. You don't retire from playing the guitar. Andres Segovia is 78 and still going strong.

Speaking of Segovia's role in the history of the classical guitar, Maracle gives great credit to him as a self-taught artist. Segovia had no one to learn classic guitar from; there were no books or teachers, and therein lies his greatness. But, continues Maracle, "Segovia is a pure performer, an artist, an emotional man who doesn't understand the need for teaching. Great artist that he is, he is no help to the student." He speaks from experience, for he met Segovia and had a private lesson with him, no mean feat achieve.

When questioned about flamenco guitar, Maracle replied with knowledge and respect, but with his basic insistence. "Flamenco is another idiom of basic, classical guitar," he said. "All flamenco guitar, he continues, used to be played only by gypsies, but now it has been written down and is available to everyone. He considers Carlos Montoya a great flamenco guitarist."

The two greatest classical guitarists alive today, according to Maracle, are young Englishmen, Julian Bream and John Wilson. "They play," he says, "with all the authority and command of the best British rock groups... like 'Cream.' They get in there and go right after it."

For all that, though, his words about the guitar are gentle and caressing. "The guitar is the most intimate instrument. It's just you and the tips of your fingers.

"Every mood you've got comes out through your fingertips. The guitar is a living instrument, responsive and alive ..." A grand passion, if ever there was one.

A CHARMING PORTRAIT of Ivan Maracle's mother, "a talented player who never realized her potential on the guitar."

CARMEL'S URBAN FOREST

MONTEREY PINE just trimmed this week towers majestically above Sunset Cultural Center, San Carlos and Eighth.

Monterey Cypress (Cupressus macrocarpa) is relatively free of insect and disease problems. In its native habitat it is confined to two groves, one at Cypress Point and one at Point Lobos State Park, but it has been planted in Europe, Australia, New Zealand and South America, as well as along the coast of California. All plantings are descendants of the two groves. The tree is most spectacular along the rocky shores between Monterey and Point Lobos, but is never more than a half mile from the shore, as it does not thrive except where the fog reaches. When not exposed to salt spray and ocean winds, it loses its fantastic shape and becomes just another fast-growing symmetrical tree. The twisted, stunted, wind-warped cypresses are what make the shoreline of Carmel so interesting.

The Monterey Cypress may live to be two or three hundred years old. Age is difficult to determine on the distorted trees along the rocky shores. These trees, with their trailing lichens (not moss) look ancient at an early age. Even when dead they remain picturesque, for the wood resists decay, the leaves fall, the bark drops off and the tree turns bone white.

The oaks of Carmel are the oaks of much of California, mostly the California Live Oak (Quercus agrifolia). It is one of the best known of trees as it appears in so many motion pictures. Like the cypress it is a picturesque tree. Its trunk leans at grotesque angles and its limbs twist and turn, sometimes almost touching the ground. It almost never grows tall or straight. Where it is exposed to sea winds it will have fantastic forms; on better sites the oaks grow taller and the crown is more circular. It may reach 75 feet in height, but it is the girth of some of these oaks that is impressive. The habit of branching near the base prevents it from being a timber tree although the wood is strong and hard. Large trees are apt to be partly hollow, caused by dry rot or termites. But for fuel it is excellent. Few trees have the heat value of seasoned live oak. Logs burn with a steady flame and form a bed of coals that have a sweet odor.

Carmel is lucky to have its oaks. Santa Barbara lost their groves to the sailing ships for fuel. In 1855, the Town Council of Santa Barbara passed an ordinance prohibiting the cutting of trees or shrubs belonging to the city, but most of the wooded land was privately owned and the price of fuel was high. Its original oak groves swept away, the town of Santa Barbara is now planted with exotic trees.

Many towns along the California coast had a similar history and now as the population explodes, the tremendous use of water is lowering the water table and this is taking its toll of oaks.

Probably few streets in Carmel are without an acacia. Over 400 species are known in different parts of the world. Three-fourths of them are native to Australia but many of these have been brought to Southern California. About a dozen species, trees and shrubs, occur in south-western United States.

True acacias have astringent bark which when punctured exudes a sticky gum; gum arabic comes from a foreign species of acacia. As a rule most acacias do not grow to timber tree size, and this is true in Carmel. Its pale blue-green color makes it a decorative tree or shrub, but its limbs are apt to break in a strong wind. It is hard to get rid of as it sprouts from the stump or roots.

There are a few other trees, some of the large size, but comprising only a small part of the Carmel Forest. The Coast Redwood occurs here and there, some of small size in yards, others of large size. The Giant Eucalyptus, in rows along N. San Antonio and Fourth Avenues, some sycamores and a few palms, and in some yards trees from other lands, or other states, such as the Monkey-puzzle tree and Ginkgo, Vine Maple and Norway Maple, Cedar, Spruce, Locust and many more.

The towering, open topped pines, the grotesque-shaped cypress and the wavy-limbed oaks, with the understory of acacias -- these are what we must deal with for the most part in the management of Carmel's forest.

The trees of Carmel

BY ROBERT TATE
City Forester

Recently, there has been much concern about smog damage to trees in Southern California. Several people have asked if the trees of Carmel are being affected. It is very difficult to fully assess the injury that may be occurring because symptoms produced by smog are very similar to those of many other diseases, insects, lack of nutrients, and lack of moisture.

So far as I have been able to ascertain, our trees are not suffering from the effects of smog. Our street trees fall into two categories: those that are very sensitive to smog and those that are resistant to the smog components. The first group is made up in part of Monterey Pine, California Sycamore, and Liquidamber. The second group contains the Coast live oak.

Smog sensitive trees have been examined by me on a systematic basis for a period of one year and I have not been able to isolate a single case. However, just recently, a young pine was lost which was very near an area where buses park with engines running. Smog could have been a factor in the tree's death. I consider this to be different from general smog conditions.

Our atmospheric conditions do not lend themselves to allowing a smog buildup in Carmel. By this I mean, we usually experience an off-shore breeze which tends to blow away pollutants before they cause damage. Twice since I have been in Carmel I have noticed smog-like conditions and both of these periods were during the months of September and October.

In order to damage plants by smog, they must be subjected to high levels over a fairly lengthly period. As yet we don't have these high levels. If we do in the future, we will have to change the make-up of the urban forest and plant smog resistant trees.

PARTY PLANS . . .

by Phyllis Jervey

Elizabeth Rees of Pebble Beach has just returned from a glamorous trip to Japan. Betty was invited to join Mayor Alioto's party on the San Francisco -- Osaka special mission to celebrate San Francisco Day at Expo '70.

Osaka is the sister city of San Francisco. The latter is the only city in the world to be so honored for the six months' duration of the Fair.

Betty could truly appreciate the beauties of Japan as she is an artist of note. Her color woodcuts are in the permanent collection at the Palace of the Legion of Honor. This talented gal is also a portrait painter, specializing in children, and her sculptures are beautiful.

One of the highlights of this trip to Japan was the stirring ceremony of 920 Japanese housewives in their exquisite kimonos and stunning obis who danced in unison.

Another outstanding experience was the tea ceremonial in which the 110 members of the special mission participated. There was also an al fresco buffet luncheon on the grounds of an ancient palace. Another time the mission was honored at a brilliant reception where there were so many Japanese dishes served that it was really a banquet.

This brings up the fact that besides her artistic endeavors Betty's other "home project" is entertaining in her attractive Pebble Beach studio-home. Our charming hostess plans a Japanese party to show pictures of their unusual tour of Japan. Exclusively for "Party Plans" here is what will be served with Betty's delicate touch.

Chicken Livers on Skewers

Half lb. chicken livers; 1 bunch scallions; ¼ lb. fresh mushrooms; 1/3 cup soy sauce; ½ cup sake (rice wine) or dry sherry; 1 T. sugar; bamboo skewers.

Cut scallions into 1-inch lengths. Cut mushrooms in half. On each skewer affix one length of scallion, one chicken liver and half a mushroom. Combine rest and dip skewers in this mixture. Grill over charcoal hibachi, turning twice for about 4 min. Brush with additional sauce while cooking.

Shrimp in Teapots

Three dozen small shrimp; 8 large fresh mushrooms; 16 canned gingko nuts or walnut halves; 3 cups dashi (or chicken broth); 1 T. sake or dry sherry; 1 t. sugar; 1 t. soy sauce; fresh pine needles; fresh lemon juice.

Shell and devein fresh shrimp or buy them already prepared. Slice mushrooms vertically into thin slices. Heat the broth and season with wine, sugar, soy sauce and a little salt to taste. Divide shrimp, mushrooms and nuts into small individual earthenware teapots. (Betty brought hers back from Japan but we have many Oriental shops in our area). Pour the prepared broth over ingredients. Cover teapots and place over low heat. Steam these 10 min. Remove from fire (or electric table server). Stuff a small bunch of washed Carmel pine needles into spout of each teapot. Serve one teapot per person with tiny saucers of lemon juice and a sake or wine cup. The contents are eaten out of the teapots, then the pine needles removed from the spouts and the broth is sipped from the small cups. The steam from the teapots absorbs the fragrance of the pine needles. Chopsticks are in order. How original! What imagination! That's Betty.

Sections of Japan are thick with mandarin orange groves. The perfume of white blossoms lingers as they turn into glowing golden fruit.

Snow Sponge with Mandarins

One small can mandarin oranges; 1 T. unflavored gelatine; 2 cups sugar; 2 egg whites; 1 t. almond extract.

Soften gelatine in ½ cup cold water. Drain liquid from mandarins, adding to this enough water to make 1½ cups; combine with gelatine and sugar in saucepan. Simmer 5 min. Allow to cool. Beat egg whites until stiff and dry. Pour lukewarm syrup slowly over beaten egg whites, whipping constantly. Stir in almond extract. Pour into Pyrex square dish. Arrange mandarins over sponge, pressing just below surface. Refrigerate and when congealed, cut into 2-inch squares. Serve as dessert with Jasmine or green tea. All recipes just given serve only four, so calculate for more.

Do you wonder that our Betty was fascinated with Japan ... but very happy to be back among our very own pine needles?

TOUGH GOING FOR BEACH LOVERS

'This is the right of way that was'

This article introduces a recent addition to the staff of the Carmel PINE CONE: A resident of Carmel and its environs since 1961, Ray Simpson was educated at San Jose State College and resigned from a 10- year career in conservation work to become a magazine editor and writer.

"As a writer," he says, "I refuse to contribute to the premature arrival of 1984."

Dear Editor,

Thought you might like to know why I haven't turned in any copy lately. So let me ask you this: have you ever tried to type a story when you're flat on your back in bed, with your left foot elevated inside an icepack? It's a drag, it really is. Don't try it sometime. It's awkward and uncomfortable and you make a lot of mistakes and your girl friend laughs at you. And I can't stand being mocked, especially when the icepack is leaking down my leg like it's an unusually warm springtime in the Sierra and I've got a typewriter on my gut. Besides, there's something about going to bed with a typewriter that's fundamentally repulsive anyway. It seems so kinky.

You're wondering maybe what I'm doing with 10 pounds of Union Ice around my ankle. Well, it's all because the county supervisors tried to do us hoi-polloi (that's you and me) a favor. They tried to give us a public right of way from Carmel Meadows down to Middle Beach -- that's the State Park beach between San Jose Beach and Carmel River Beach. A little over 10 years ago the developers of Carmel Meadows were permitted to build a housing tract there only if they deeded to the State Park system a right-of-way guaranteeing access to the beach to the general public. (That's also you and me.)

So the other day I went looking for the right-of-way to Middle Beach. And I was real proud. Real proud of the way the State Park boys have lived up to their responsibility to you and me and our kids and their kids to see to it that we'll still get to enjoy our public beaches even if the old access routes have been built over and messed over. Believe it or not, I found the right-of-way.

All I had to do was drive to the end of Ribera Road, skirt a privately developed parking space that was occupied, poke my head between two ornamental trees, and there it was! An unmarked, V-shaped, rain-gullied path with a bunch of old timbers beside it.

This has got to be it I figure, so I took a few steps down the trail when I heard this weird sound, like breaking twigs. Which happens to be coming from my left ankle. And I am all of a sudden skiing down this damn trail on my knees with my ankle turned at an angle nature did not exactly intend. But the beach sure did look beautiful, from what I could see of it while I was face-down in the path.

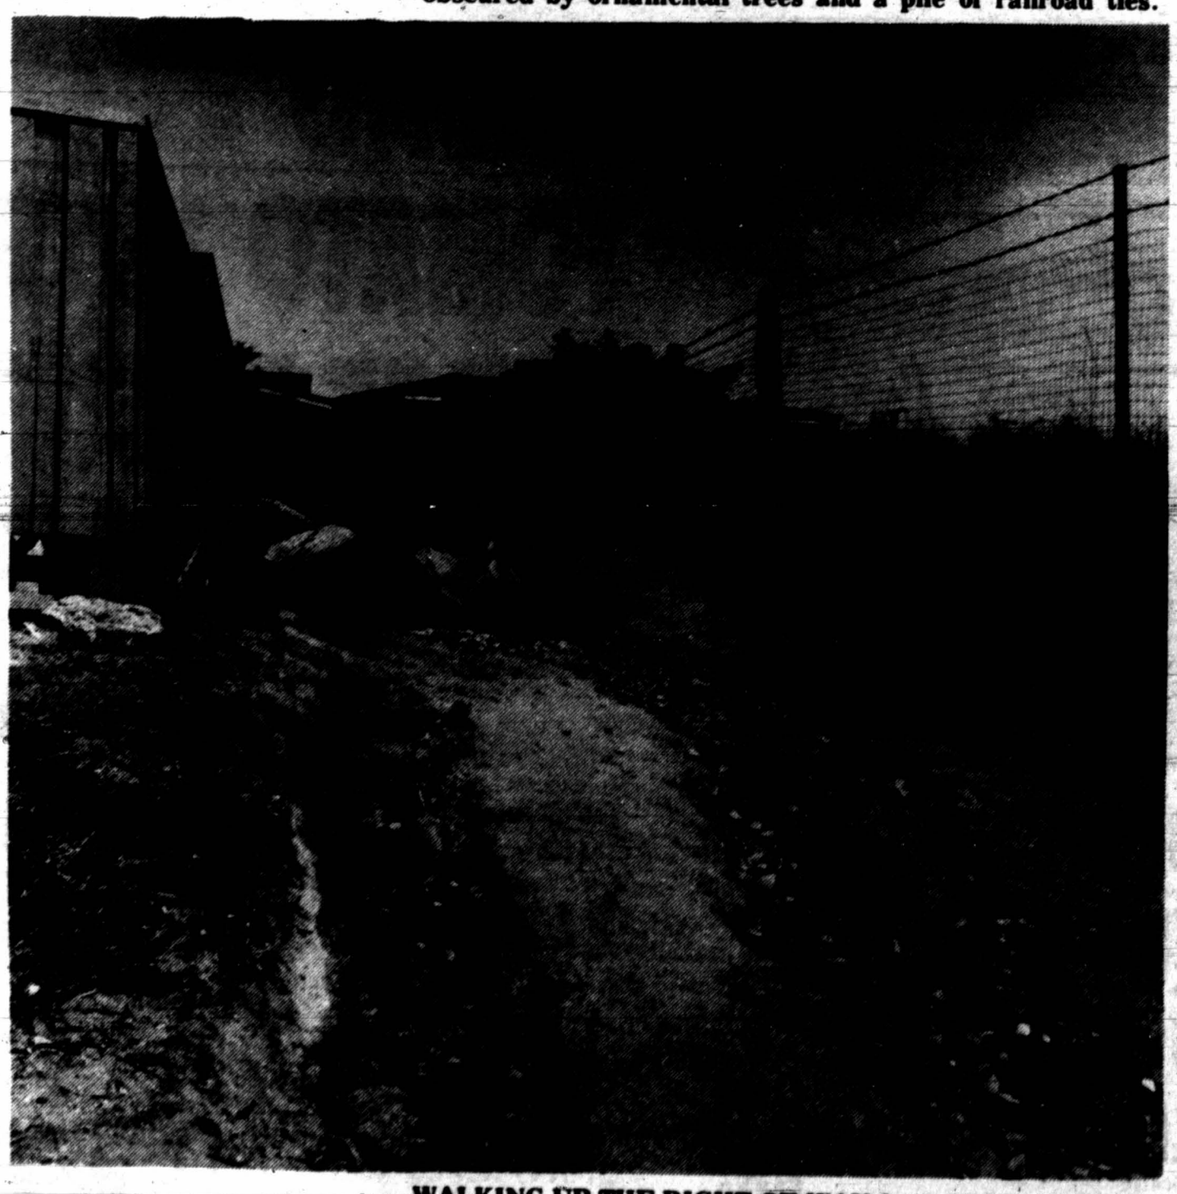
And while I was lying there waiting for the numbness to leave my leg I had time to feel real grateful that the supervisors and the boys from the park service were looking out for my interests the way they were. Yessir, real grateful. In fact, I don't think I'll ever feel such gratitude again. Hopefully. And when you see me, don't worry if I look a little pale. It's just that the X-Ray room at Community Hospital is a lousy place to get a tan.

But don't let me discourage you. If you want to use our public right-of-way to Middle Beach, go right ahead. I'm sure the homeowners in Carmel Meadows won't mind, at least I don't think so. But take a tip from me. The next time you go to Middle Beach, wear your golf shoes. Or high-top hiking boots, the kind that lace up to your knees. You may look a little funny, and the beautiful beach people may laugh and mock you, but take it from me, it sure beats being a crip.

And remember to salute those ever-vigilant men in the park service who are sworn to "preserve and protect" our great natural heritage, to hold it in trust for the State, for the State is another way of saying you and me. At least, that's they way it started out.

Later,
RAY SIMPSON

THIS IS THE ENTRANCE to the public right-of-way to Middle Beach at the end of Ribera Road in the Carmel Meadows housing development. Note that the right-of-way is unposted and the entrance is gravelled-over, which creates the effect of a private parking lot. The right-of-way is further obscured by ornamental trees and a pile of railroad ties.



WALKING UP THE RIGHT-OF-WAY from Middle Beach to Ribera Road, beach-users are obliged to negotiate a trail that slopes sharply, is rain-gullied and generally in disrepair. Structure at left belongs to the residence of Howard Bucquet. Past attempts by state park personnel to post the right-of-way have resulted in the signs being torn down by persons unknown.

Sea

One of the experts testifying in behalf of the Friends of the Sea Otter before the Senate Committee on Natural Resources and Wildlife in Sacramento on April 6, was Judson E. Vandevere, former naturalist at Point Lobos State Park and teacher at Carmel's Lyceum for Gifted Children. Vandevere is currently engaged in a research project on the California Sea Otter at the University of California at Santa Cruz. Asked the present status of Senator Donald Grunsky's bill to allow the California Department of Fish and Game to "manage" the otter, Vandevere said, "We simply don't know. Senator Grunsky told Mrs. Owings (Margaret Owings, founder of Friends of the Sea Otter) that she and other interested conservationists would be allowed to review the original bill before it was presented to the Legislature. He reneged on this promise, and later claimed it was an oversight. He hasn't kept us informed of any revisions he plans to make in the measure."

BY RAY SIMPSON

"The Department of Fish and Game -- as is true with most regulatory agencies in the United States -- is controlled by the industry it is supposed to regulate. The Department of Fish and Game has always been oriented towards the interests of commercial and sports fishermen and hunters, rather than towards conservationists and wildlife groups. They get their financial support from license fees paid by commercial and sports fishermen and hunters, and their orientation has always inclined towards the interests of those groups. It is another case of the regulatory agency being in bed with the people they're supposed to regulate."

I'd asked Jud Vandevere -- a local naturalist engaged in fulltime research on the California Sea Otter under a grant funded by the Friends of the Sea Otter -- why the Department of Fish and Game, abetted by State Senator Donald Grunsky (R-Watsonville), were so anxious to "manage" the sea otter. Vandevere explained to me that 57 abalone fishermen had paid license fees of $100 each for the 1970 abalone season, and that unless something was done to eliminate the otter from competing with them in taking abalone, these same fishermen were threatening to kill 100 to 1,000 sea otter.

Rumors that rafts of sea otter have been despatched with dynamite are unsubstantiated so far as Vandevere knows. It is a fact, however, that bodies of eight sea otters -- killed by gunshot -- have been found in the Morro Bay-Cambria region.

"Other otters have been killed by boat propellers," Vandevere said, "and we have this problem up here. We have otters in the Monterey marina that work right in among the boats and pass through the narrow slip the boats use to get out into the bay. The otters are very vulnerable and boat owners should be particularly cautious when they're operating in the kelp beds where the otter tie up and raft. The boats that take tourists on bay tours ease slowly into the kelp beds and then, after their paid customers have seen the sea otters, they pull out full speed ahead. This goes on every day, and several times a day on weekends. They are apt to destroy their own tourist attraction."

So far as Vandevere knows the Department of Fish and Game has never prosecuted anyone for discharging firearms within the Sea Otter Refuge. "Although," he says, "I have stopped people from shooting along Highway No. 1. I heard what sounded like automatic weapons firing south of Limekiln Creek. I rushed over and found two men and gave them a hard time, and they gave me a hard time right back. They started to leave and noticed I had a State car from the University of California. Then they flashed their badges and identified themselves as narcotic agents on their way to Salmon Creek to roust the gentle people. They had been testing their automatic weapons before going down there."

FAULTY DATA

Vandevere also [illegible] that the Department of Fish and Game is using faulty data in order to substantiate their claim that the sea otter population is "exploding". "The assumption," he says in his report to the Senate Committee on Natural Resources and Wildlife, "that the otter population is expanding rapidly is based on data which should be questioned. The earlier counts, going back to 1916, were made more or less casually, in different ways by different people.

"These are being compared with the highest counts obtained by the Department of Fish and Game during the past two years. However, the almost monthly aerial counts of the DFG have varied widely in their totals. Only three of the ten counts in 1969 were high. I find it difficult to assume that those older counts were as accurate as the three best tries out of ten using today's more sophisticated techniques."

Vandevere also indicts Senator Grunsky for authoring legislation that encourages the overharvesting of the abalone resource. As he stated in his report to the Senate committee, "The Legislature, in its wisdom, prohibited the export of abalones from California for 52 years, thus reducing the incentive to overharvest the resource. However, in 1967, acting at the request of Senators Grunsky and Mills, the Legislature repealed this protective measure and thereby further increased the pressure on the fishery." The effect of allowing the export of abalone outside the State of California has been to raise the price of abalone to $5.25 a pound.

The argument that the sea otter is overgrazing its own refuge is not borne out by Vandevere's daily observations of the otter. The third-largest concentration of sea otters is to be found in the very heart of the otter refuge. This is the area most frequented by pregnant female sea otters and those with dependent pups, and which has been supporting the bulk of the otter population for over thirty years.

SOME MOVE

The other two concentrations of sea otter are to be found north and south of their "protected" refuge. These otters are, typically, the younger, more vigorous and adventursome adolescents who are expanding the coastal range of the otter and who most enchant otter watchers with their playful interaction which is practice for their adult sex roles.

The Department of Fish and Game, on the other hand, interprets the dumbbell-shaped distribution of otter to mean that the otter have created an "underwater desert" within the heart of their refuge and now are expanding north and south for reasons of self-deprivation and need.

Conservationists maintain that this reasoning is patently nonsensical and absurd as evidenced by the high ratio of pups to adults within the heart of the refuge. It would seem, therefore, that – as conservationists claim – the DFG is typically more concerned with protecting the financial interests of a small, gourmet industry, than they are with protecting the sea otter, a valuable and mutually-held natural resource.

I asked Vandevere why "taking", "managing", and "cropping" -- in the euphemistic argot of the Department of Fish and Game always seems to boil down to outright killing of the "managed" species. "Their philosophy," he replied, "is that any managed species is not supposed to cause any conflict with a commercial resource. The otters are supposed to coexist within a prescribed refuge as if they were Indians confined to a reservation."

A CAT'S LIFE

Very early the other morning, just after sunrise, we opened our door to investigate a strange wailing. There was nothing stirring, but as we were about to close the door, our glance fell on a sad sight. On the neighbor's garage roof, curled into a forlorn little black ball, lay a cat. He had positioned himself to catch the first early rays of sunlight.

We knew the cat and knew why he was up there on the roof; he was an unneutered male, and like most toms, he sprayed in the house. Therefore, he was condemned to an outdoor existence, sleeping out in fair weather or foul, in whatever shelter or "nest" he could find for himself. We do not like to contemplate his lifespan ...

Too many people are attracted to cats as pets because they consider them "easy" to care for. Memories hark back to the "good old days" when every farmhouse had its cats, and they lived, loved and disappeared in the backyard realm of barn and outbuildings. In those days, it was thought sufficient to set out a pan of milk for the cats, for they were expected to "earn their keep" by mousing and ratting and to exist off the little creatures they killed.

Cats then were rarely pets. It often happened that a child took a kitten from the ever-present litters up in the hayloft and kept it for awhile, but when it had grown, it usually drifted back into barnyard life -- which is to say a life of semi-starvation, plagued by parasites and endless litters of equally doomed kittens.

Today, there are few of us who live on a farm or ranch; when we elect to take in a kitten as a pet, we do so in surroundings that are eminently civilized. We live, most of use, in a house with limited yard space, or in an apartment with perhaps a terrace or patio. We also live in an environment unfriendly to straying animals;few of us reside in such remote areas that we have no fears of cars killing our pets. Therefore, when we decide to buy or adopt a kitten, we should be aware of the animal's needs and be willing to meet them.

Cats, like dogs, have certain basic requirements to ensure their health and well-being. They require a balanced diet, inoculation against that virulent cat-killer, feline enteritis (cat distemper), protection from unwanted pregnancy, a warm place to sleep and freedom from internal and external parasites. They need love, too.

It is not enough to turn your growing kitten loose with the intent of having him catch his supper. Cats catch mice not simply because they are hungry, but because of an innate, instinctive drive to hunt. It has been proven that the well-fed cat is a better mouser than the cat who must rely on mice for dinner. Hunting requires strength, agility, steady nerves, stamina; a half-starved cat stands a poor chance of filling its stomach, let alone ridding your property of vermin. The sleek, well-fed cat will catch more mice than its hungry cousin; the only problem is that he will probably bring them to you as "gifts" instead of eating them!

Unfortunately, except in the case of purebreds, "cats are cheap." Irresponsible cat owners permit their females to roam and mate; other equally irresponsible people keep their toms intact rather than spend the dollars to neuter them -- ending, incidentally, the problem of spraying. So there are kittens aplenty; you have probably been asked by a friend or neighbor to take one of their kittens in. And, since most kittens are free, people are reluctant to spend money to spay, neuter or inoculate them. If it dies, there will be more free kittens; if it produces babies, there is always the Pound to solve the problem; if it is a male and he matures and "sprays", he can be turned out to fend for himself and another kitten obtained to replace him. A sad cycle, isn't it?

But if you want a cat as a pet, perhaps you will be willing to spend the money to safeguard it. Cats are sweet, delightful, affectionate, home-loving, intelligent creatures. It is not their fault that females tend to have kittens in the middle of your bed three of four times a year or that toms spray your rugs and drapes. The cat who has kittens with monotonous regularity and the tom who goes "catting" at night, fighting and howling are simply following nature's dictates. In this case, nature must be assisted; you can end these natural albeit undesirable traits by a one-time, simple surgical procedure.

If you like cats and want one in your home, give it a fair chance. Provide good food regularly. Cats needn't dine on pate or poached salmon any more than they should be forced to live on mice and garbage. If fed sensibly from kittenhood, they thrive on good quality commercial catfood. Have clean water available at all times. If you don't see your cat drinking, he's probably supplying himself, unnoticed, from your bathroom. Keep a litter pan, clean and fresh, available where your cat can reach it.

Keep your cat indoors, at least at night. Provide a soft, snug bed for it, even if it prefers your sofa or bed. You don't want your pet shivering beneath some parked car on a cold, rainy night. Don't go away for the weekend believing a cat can take care of itself. It can't; it needs human care if it is to remain a healthy household pet.

Finally, don't think of kittens as being a dime a dozen. Think of them as loving, living little beings, requiring only a little conscientious care to make them as much a part of your family as your dog -- or your child.

With Bob Wood In Sacramento

Although the Legislature has been in session since January 4, I didn't really get my official baptism under fire until the other day on the Assembly floor. Up until last Wednesday, I had introduced several resolutions along with a few minor bills, and have co-authored several name bills, actually drawn up by other Assemblymen, but I had never really spoken on the floor in my own behalf on any bill of any real importance; in other words a bill of my own that could create some discussion and controversy on the floor. However, last Wednesday it was my turn to present my bill AB 107 requiring that re-use or reclamation of water be one of the uses to be considered by the State Water Quality Resources Board in acting upon applications to appropriate water.

After receiving permission from the Speaker to proceed, I presented my reasons why I thought there was a need for such a bill. I concluded my testimony and sat down awaiting the verdict of my fellow Legislators.

There is a large board in the front of the Assembly wall and each Assemblyman's name is listed with a green and red light behind each name. Each desk is equipped with a small switch. If a Legislator approves of a measure he turns the switch to the yes side and a green light shows up by his name. If he desires a no vote, or disapproves of the measure, he flips the no switch and a red light appears on the huge board behind his name. I didn't anticipate much trouble and hoped for a majority of green lights which would show approval, I only needed 41 green or yes votes. However, upon concluding my testimony, and when the Speaker called for the vote, almost 60 percent of the lights turned up red, and I was flabbergasted. I hadn't anticipated this much trouble. One fellow Legislator said later that I turned red from the back of my neck over the top of my head and down to a point below my Adam's apple. I momentarily lost my composure and before I could regain it Assemblyman Jack Fenton, a Democrat from Whittier who sits in the desk in front of me had leaned backward and flicked my own switch from a yes vote (or green light) to a no vote, or a red light, and he did this without me noticing what he was up to. However, just before the vote closed every man on the floor Republican and Democrat alike, had switched to a yes or a green vote for approval of my bill. And when I looked up at the Board the only red light showing in opposition to the bill was a red light opposite my own name, and here I was, the author of the bill. I was greatly relieved to receive this unanimous support and then suddenly it dawned upon me that there was really no opposition all along, it was really just the Legislature's way of breaking in a Freshman Assemblyman. As I happily left the Assembly floor that day a senior Legislator, and a member of the Assembly for over 15 years, came along side and said, "Bob, you have now been officially baptised, you are now one of us. However, don't expect this unanimous approval on all your future bills. (P.S. I'm sure I won't!)

PUBLIC STABLE IS APPROVED IN LOWER CARMEL VALLEY

A use permit for a public stable was approved for Jerry Taylor by the county zoning administrator.

The stable is located in Rancho Canada de la Segunda, fronting on and southerly of Carmel Valley Road. While it is in a district zoned for an unlimited number of animals on the property provided that the property owner owns all the animals, Taylor requested permission to house or board horses belonging to other people.

The Lower Carmel Valley Advisory Committee recommended approval for a 2-year period.

Robert Gilcrest, a realtor representing Taylor, read a letter circulated by Mrs. Taylor which stated that 5 property owners in the area have no objection to the application. He also stated that the Taylors are requesting a public stable for a maximum of 12 horses.

The use permit was granted subject to the following conditions:

1. That the operation be limited to the boarding, stabling, and training of horses only.
2. That there be no sales of horses other than the applicant's.
3. That there be no rental of animals.
4. That the public stable be limited to a maximum of twelve horses.
5. That there be no riding events, shows, or similar operations.
6. That an adequate parking area for horse trailers be established south of the stables.
7. That the location, type, and wattage of all exterior lights on the property be approved by the Director of Planning.
8. That any lights in the riding area be turned off by 10:00 p.m.
9. Grant to County by deed, area within Official Plan Line on Carmel Valley Road.
10. Construct standard driveway connection to Carmel Valley Road prior to use.
11. If existing well is to be used for any purpose, then it must be chlorinated and sealed as required by the Health Department.
12. If the well is to be abandoned, then it is to be properly abandoned as required by State Codes.
13. That this permit expire on April 9, 1980.

Some things YOU can do

Environment is a big word. What can one mere individual do about it?

Plenty. Such as:

1. Save all aluminum cans, pie plates, trays from TV dinners, etc. The Sierra Club will be making another area-wide collection of aluminum containers in June (many high school and college students did the door-to-door collecting for the earlier drive). The aluminum can re re-used. Aluminum cans are the ones without seams, and with rounded bottoms (many beer cans and some soft drink cans are aluminum.)

2. Buy soft drinks in returnable bottles. You'll have to hunt for these bottles at first, but there are several advantages. It's cheaper. It will cut down on the volume of garbage that has to be buried (broken glass doesn't do anything but remain broken glass) and kids love to get the refund money. And it makes sense. Why shouldn't a perfectly good bottle be used again?

3. Try using biodegradable soap, the kind that can be absorbed by the ground naturally instead of foaming on forever. Detergents, and now enzyme cleaners, are a major cause of water pollution and a major problem at sewage treatment plants across the nation. (See separate story on this page for how to use plain soap and get your clothes clean too!)

4. Get expert help before spraying oak trees or any other trees or plants in your garden. Many sprays doom not only oak moths, but their natural predators and scores of other insects -- everything from bees to ladybugs. By killing off all insects indiscriminately, you may inadvertantly eliminate hundreds of birds as well.

'Survival Week' programs for the entire area

Lectures and exhibits on pollution and other environmental problems are included in a broad "Survival Week" program at Monterey Peninsula College.

Although April 22, has been designated Earth Day throughout the nation, MPC students and faculty have expanded their environmental observance to a seven-day program.

Today and tonight, many classes at MPC will focus on environmental problems. These lectures will all be open to the public, and a schedule listing times and locations of specific classes will be available in the library patio.

Also set up in the library patio will be an exhibit of problems of wildlife conservation arranged by Mrs. Araby Colton of Carmel Valley.

Other exhibits are planned for librarires in Monterey, Pacific Grove, MPC and Carmel, featuring books on ecology and pollution and pamphlets on recycling certain products, such as aluminum.

During this week, MPC students have been urged to hitch-hike, ride bycycles or band together in car pools to cut down on the number of cars moving on and off the campus.

CARS WITHOUT PASSENGERS

This effort is the outgrowth of a survey taken by members of the Environmental Action Committee last month, when the counted the number of cars entering the campus and how many occupants each car had. On one day the counted 4,076 cars between 7 a.m. and 7:30 p.m., and 71 percent included only the driver.

Also this week, KMST-TV, Channel 46, is donating a half-hour time period from 3:30 to 4:00 p.m. to the Environmental Action Committee. Today's program will feature Fred Shuier, an instructor at Cabrillo College, and Dr. Donald Abbott of Hopkins Marine Station discussing pollution in Monterey Bay.

Tomorrow Dr. John Phillips of Hopkins will talk about DDT, and on Friday the guest epxert will be Dr. David Eppel, also from Hopkins. His topic will be "Death of the Oceans".

Part of the MPC effort is planned to survive "Survival Week." Several students have prepared a large organic garden bwtween the National Guard Armory and the volleyball courts where they plan to grow flowers, vegetables and fruit trees.

Today the garden will serve a special purpose. At noon a "pllution time capsule" will be buried there, containing the winners in the "Greatest Polluters of the Monterey Bay Area" contest being donducted on the MPC campus.

Co-ordinators of the week-long event are Jim Locke, a student teacher from San Jose State College, and Betsy Baer-McLeod, a student. Jane Hunt is program chairman.

WARNING ISSUED ON DUMPING IN CARMEL RIVER

Carmel Valley residents were warned last week to keep a sharp eye out for anyone dumping anything into the Carmel River.

The warning came from County sanitarian Walter Wong after his office was told that a septic tank service truck was seen dumping sewage into the river on two separate occasions within the past month.

The truck was reported seen once at the end of Schulte Road and another time above the Farm Center. On both occasions, witnesses said, sewage taken from septic tanks was being emptied into the river.

Wong said all septic tank firms in Monterey County must be licensed by the County Health Department.

"If we catch someone dumping in an unauthorized area, we can suspend their permit to operate, or revoke it permanently," he said. Persons convicted in court of unauthorized dumping are also subject to a $500 fine or six months in jail, or both.

Wong said anyone seeing sewage, garbage or any other foreign material being dumped into the Carmel River should note the license number of the car or truck and notify the sheriff's department or the County Health Department immediately. It isn't necessary for the health department to catch the culprit in the act if the complaining witness will later testify to exactly what it was he saw.

The health department has revoked operating permits for septic tank firms in the past. Wong said "fly-by-night" firms, which go door-to-door and operate without County permits to begin with, are most often guilty of dumping in unauthorized locations.

Mattie Dudley leads campaign for 'Coffee House' in Carmel

Mattie Dudley is not one to turn away from a serious problem with a "what can I do about it?" shrug.

The vivacious Carmel High School junior from Carmel Valley has decided that there is something she and her friends can do to change the current drug scene and benefit the majority of "straight" kids as well. Right now she's working hard to convince local officials, businessmen and parents that her idea will work.

Mattie would like to see a coffee house established in Carmel that would cater to high school students and the "street people" who presently congregate along Ocean Ave.

Its attractions would include shuffle board, chess, records, TV, food and soft drinks -- and one or more full-time counselors who would be available for anyone to talk to any day or evening until midnight.

Although it would be youth-oriented, adults would be welcome. In fact, Mattie hopes that many adults interested in young people would make it a habit to drop in, maybe for a cup of coffee, maybe for a lengthy conversation.

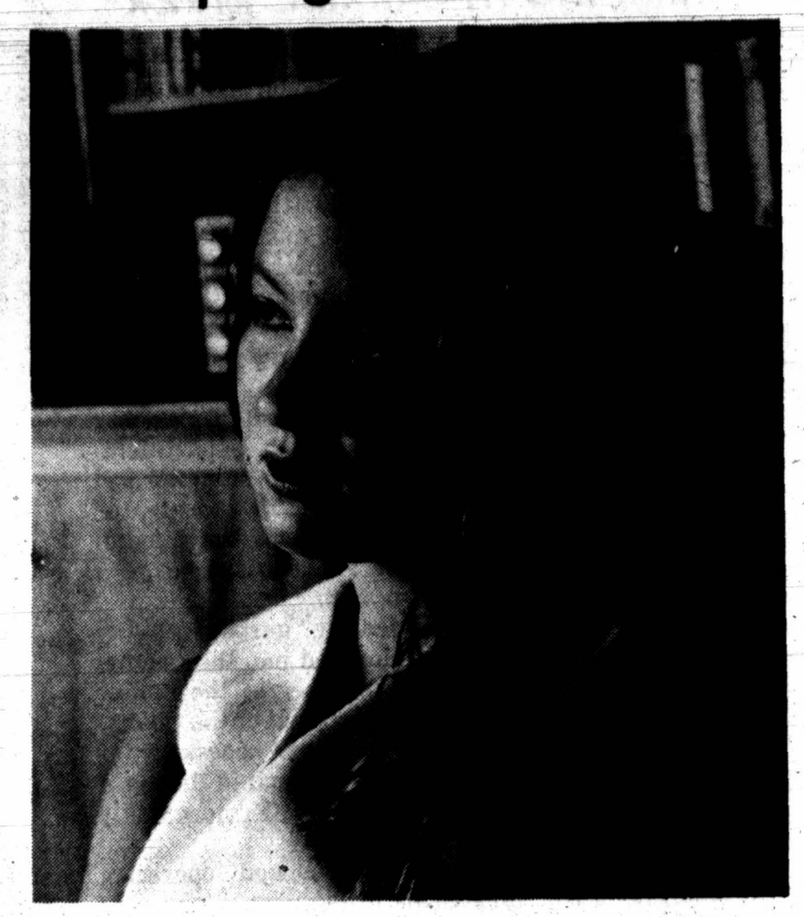
And what about drugs?

"This would operate on the honor system," Mattie says firmly. "There have been a lot of places like this that have opened up where this has worked well. The people who come in would simply know that no drugs are allowed. It would be a real honor code."

There are many reasons Mattie thinks a coffee house is needed. She points out that at present there is no place for high school students to hang out, to go after school or on a weekend where they can count on seeing friends and having an enjoyable, inexpensive time.

"All anyone ever says now is "let's cruise town'. So okay, you cruise town for awhile. There's nothing going on. Kids want something to do, someplace to go. There isn't any."

Carmel businessmen she has talked to have been enthusiastic about the idea of a coffee house because they see it as one way to "get the hippies off the streets."



MATTIE DUDLEY

HELP FOR HIPPIES

Mattie sees other advantages for the street people.

"I think they really need help," she says. "They need someone,and they can't talk to their parents. With someplace to go, where they'd be accepted, they wouldn't have to feel like outcasts. And there'd be counselors for them to talk to, to help them."

Mattie and another student, Bob Faul, have contacted the Carmel Businessman's Association and the Carmel City Council about the project. Their plan was received cordially, but so far no one has suggested a suitable location for such a coffee house, and no funds have been raised for its operation.

The Drug Abuse Committee appointed by the Carmel School Board is also interested in the idea. Mattie, who is an alternate student member on the school board, is a member of the committee and has shared in its study of the local drug scene.

Mattie and Bob have checked into other coffee house operations, and estimate they would need about $2500 in capital to get started, not including the cost of a building.

"Several businessmen have been really positive about the whole thing and have said they'd back us morally and financially," she explained. "and some other people on our committee have checked around and found that several good people would volunteer to be counselors. So what we really need now is a place."

She expects to speak before more groups in the next few weeks, with the hope that somewhere along the line a suitable location will turn up.

Several other students at the high school have signed up to help with the project in any way possible. Among them are Jim Heisinger, Denis Lonefellow, Ce-Ce Rogers, Debbie Nystrom, Cindy Leslie, Cathy Toldi, Bill Forbes, April Master, Josh Scheid, Marci Lewis, Noel Jensen, Chris Lundblad, Brink Harrison, Paul Esenhiser, Doug McCall, Vicky Budkley, Dana Reade and Linder Laiolo.

"All we want to do is to get something constructive going here," says Mattie enthusiastically. "We know this can work, because it has worked other places. We just need some help to get going."

sunrise.....TO SUNSET

by Dorothy Bowman

As this column goes to print, April is soon bidding us adieu, and I'm rather amazed this is already the 5th edition of sunrise ... to SUNSET. Time, like happiness is fleeting, but dare not let the days go by without a more than casual visit to Sunset Center.

You shall be missing many fine programs -- like the beautiful music that filled the theater last Saturday from two to three p.m., when Dr. Greenberg launched a new music program, free to our Peninsula music lovers, known as the "Record Collectors Hour".

If you missed our first Bach-Beethoven program, jot down April 25th, 2-3 p.m., for your listening pleasure. He will feature the French Counterpoint Ensemble Instrumental Sinfonia, playing "Adagio for Organ and Strings," by Albinoni, directed by Jean Witold; Bach's Orchestral Suite No. 1 in C Major", featuring Kurt Redel, conducting the Pro Arte Chamber Music of Munich; and Handel's vocal arias from the operas "Alcina" & "Esther" -- featuring Joan Sutherland, soprano, William Herbert, tenor, and Hervey Alan, bass -- with the Philomusica of London, conducted by Anthony Lewis.

This is your program, provided by your Center, to enrich your life, by the sharing and appreciation of great music in this most beautiful environment, Sunset Theater.

The refurbishment of Sunset School Auditorium in September of 1969, is only one example of the great potential of this lovely old school building. With your enthusiastic and magnamimous support, new areas of beauty and usefulness will blossom for your personal enrichment so necessary to sustain our frantic-paced lives of the 70's.

We have an old building with new possibilities; let us put our heads and hearts together, and make the most of now. I repeat ... time is fleeting, and we must act now to really activate this beautiful spot.

For example, the terraced patio off the parking lot has much to offer -- in the near future, like Sunday, April 26th, 2-6 p.m., when Artisans and Performers alike, will enhance the grounds and surrounding studios with displays, demonstrations, and performances. Many of these same residents of Sunset Center will be featured artists in the days to come in the newly refurbished office quarters of your manager, presenting a showcase of their work.

When the hammering ceases and the last trowel is laid to rest, a "New Look" will emerge at San Carlos and Eighth. Meantime, watch these fine artizans at work, both drawing and printing, showing the initial sketch to the finished print.

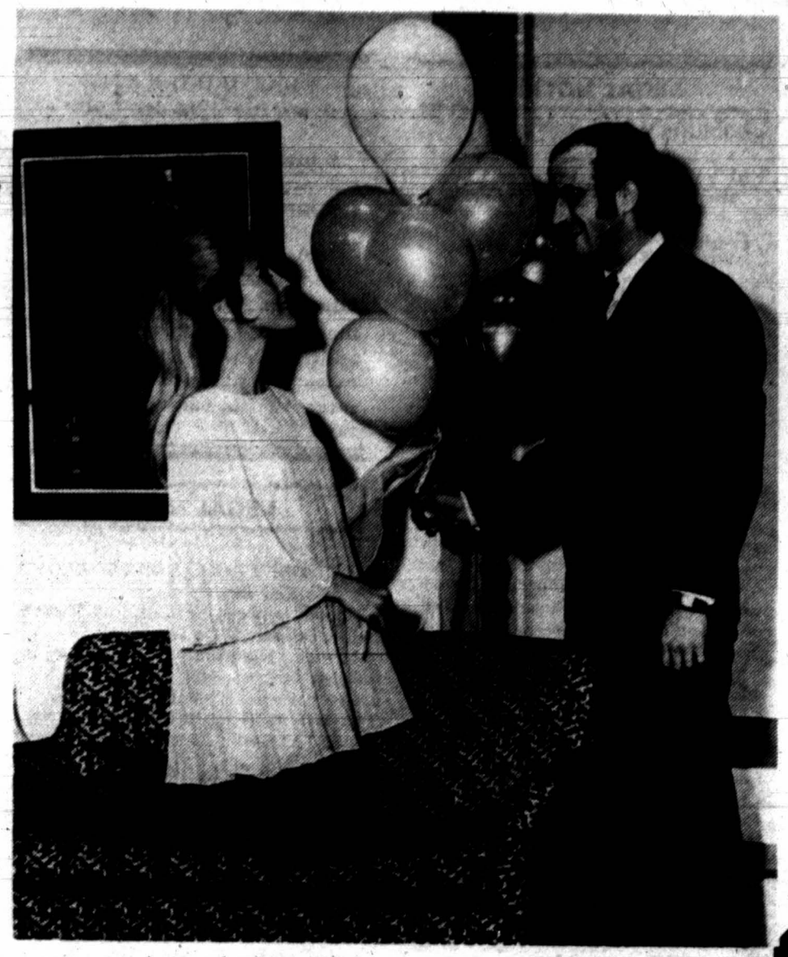
Carmel Graphics, Studio 4, is a composite of many fine craftsmen, an inspiration to watch in action. As these indoor-outdoor activities are repeated from month to month, new people and new subjects will be featured.

Studio 7, Artists Workshop, will also feature new exhibits and demonstrations; Artists and craftsmen will begin at 2 p.m. Our performing arts program, beginning at 3:00 p.m. featuring the Ballet Arts, directed by Mary Burr and Marianne Holstrum, at 3:30; the students of Nancy Ness Bowman will perform a series of operatic arias; at 4:00 p.m., Marianne Holstrum will again feature her students in a Dance Demonstration, "How To in Dance."

At 4:30 p.m., Marsha Hovic, Director of Children's Experimental Theater will feature her Young Actors Company in the presentation of "Aria da Capo", by Edna St. Vincent Millet, acted by Barbara Shuler, Kirsten Hovic, Mike Roberts, Mark Shuler, Cary Crockett At 5:00 p.m. Sunset Theater's last production of the "Artist's in Action" program will feature the Black Lion production presentation of their special documentary films.

To add a special touch to our busy day, Mrs. Gerry Reeves, specializing in Japanese Floral Arrangements, will demonstrate her art throughout the afternoon. One vital highlight of the day will feature the talented students in Pat Carey's Children's art classes. To wind up our great array of talent, Richard Brace will recreate his TV demonstration of the "Art of Animation."

Don't miss this special day at Sunset, come rain, or shine.



IN "ANY WEDNESDAY," now halfway through its run at the Studio Theatre-Restaurant, Ellen (Brit Lind) has a thing about balloons as part of a generally kooky personality. Cass (Rod Allison) presents her with a few in the process of untangling her affair with a business tycoon who lavishes diamonds on her. The Muriel Resnik comedy which ran nearly 1000 performances on Broadway may be seen in Carmel on Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights at the Carmel dinner theatre. Zane Photo - Richard Amrhein

Letters to the editor

Dear Sir:

Thanks for the pictures in the Pine Cone of the Harrison Library. I spent many happy hours in it back during the time I was stationed at Fort Ord during 1944-45. Have been in Carmel many times since, of course, and always stop in to savor the wonderful feeling one gets upon entering the library.

It is my sincere hope that it can be retained as a library and continue to give others the pleasure that it has given me.

Very truly yours,
F.C. COURTER
1775 20th St. N.E.
Salem, Oregon

Dear Sir:

Congratulations to the newly elected Carmel City Councilmen, Bernard Anderson and Kenneth Brown, in their very successful first exposure to voters at the polls.

Although a strong supporter of the candidate who came in third by only a a 71 vote margin, Gunnar Norberg, I have only praise for the clean campaigns conducted by Leslie Gross, Charles McEwen and the two victors.

Now, all Carmelites and members of Greater Carmel should support this new council, attend its meetings and help achieve the sonorous, rather than tranquilizing, harmony an ever-vigilant Carmel needs to survive as the very distinctive community it is!

Sincerely yours,
BERTRAM F. RUDOLPH, JR.

Dear Editor -

I am opposed to moving the Carmel Library from its present location on Ocean Ave. This is a central location near the "bus" line and the stores. The childrens' room could be made into an expanded space for the main library and a second story could be added to the Library building on 6th Ave. for the childrens' room. This would not destroy the charm of the present building and save a lot of money.

Yours truly

Notwithstanding any other provisions of the Contract Documents, it is clearly understood and agreed that the minimum wage rates, as determined by the U.S. Department of Labor, and the prevailing minimum wage rate paid to the corresponding classes of workmen in Carmel shall be paid. In case of any difference between the wage rates as determined by the U.S. Department of Labor, and the prevailing wage rate, the higher rate shall be the applicable minimum for such trade or occupation. Copies of the minimum wage rates, as determined by the U.S. Department of Labor are included herein by reference.

The bid or contract shall be subject to modification to comply with revisions in the federal minimum wage schedules.

In the event it is necessary to employ workers in a classification not listed, the Contractor shall make application to the agency having jurisdiction for the determination of the prevailing wage rate for such workmen. WHEREAS, this Board has duly considered said scale and finds the same to be correct in all particulars;

NOW, THEREFORE, IT IS HEREBY FOUND, DETERMINED AND ORDERED, as follows:

1. That the Wage Scale hereinabove set forth is hereby established and adopted as the prevailing rate of per diem wages for work of a similar character to that above described in the locality in which such public work is proposed to be performed.

Enos Fouratt's Specials

UP ON MARTIN ROAD IN HATTON FIELDS is a two-bedroom, den or third bedroom, two-bath home with a two-car attached garage and paved turnaround driveway that you should see if you want a Point Lobos view; want the many homes in Hatton Fields obscured from view by a growth of stately pines; don't mind a non-modern completely functional kitchen; and want to help the elderly owners achieve their desire of moving to a retirement home. They are very anxious to sell but since it really is an effort for them to show the home, respectfully request that cooperating brokers consider it a two-bedroom home. It would have to be expanded to accommodate a family. Acquisition fee is $55,000.

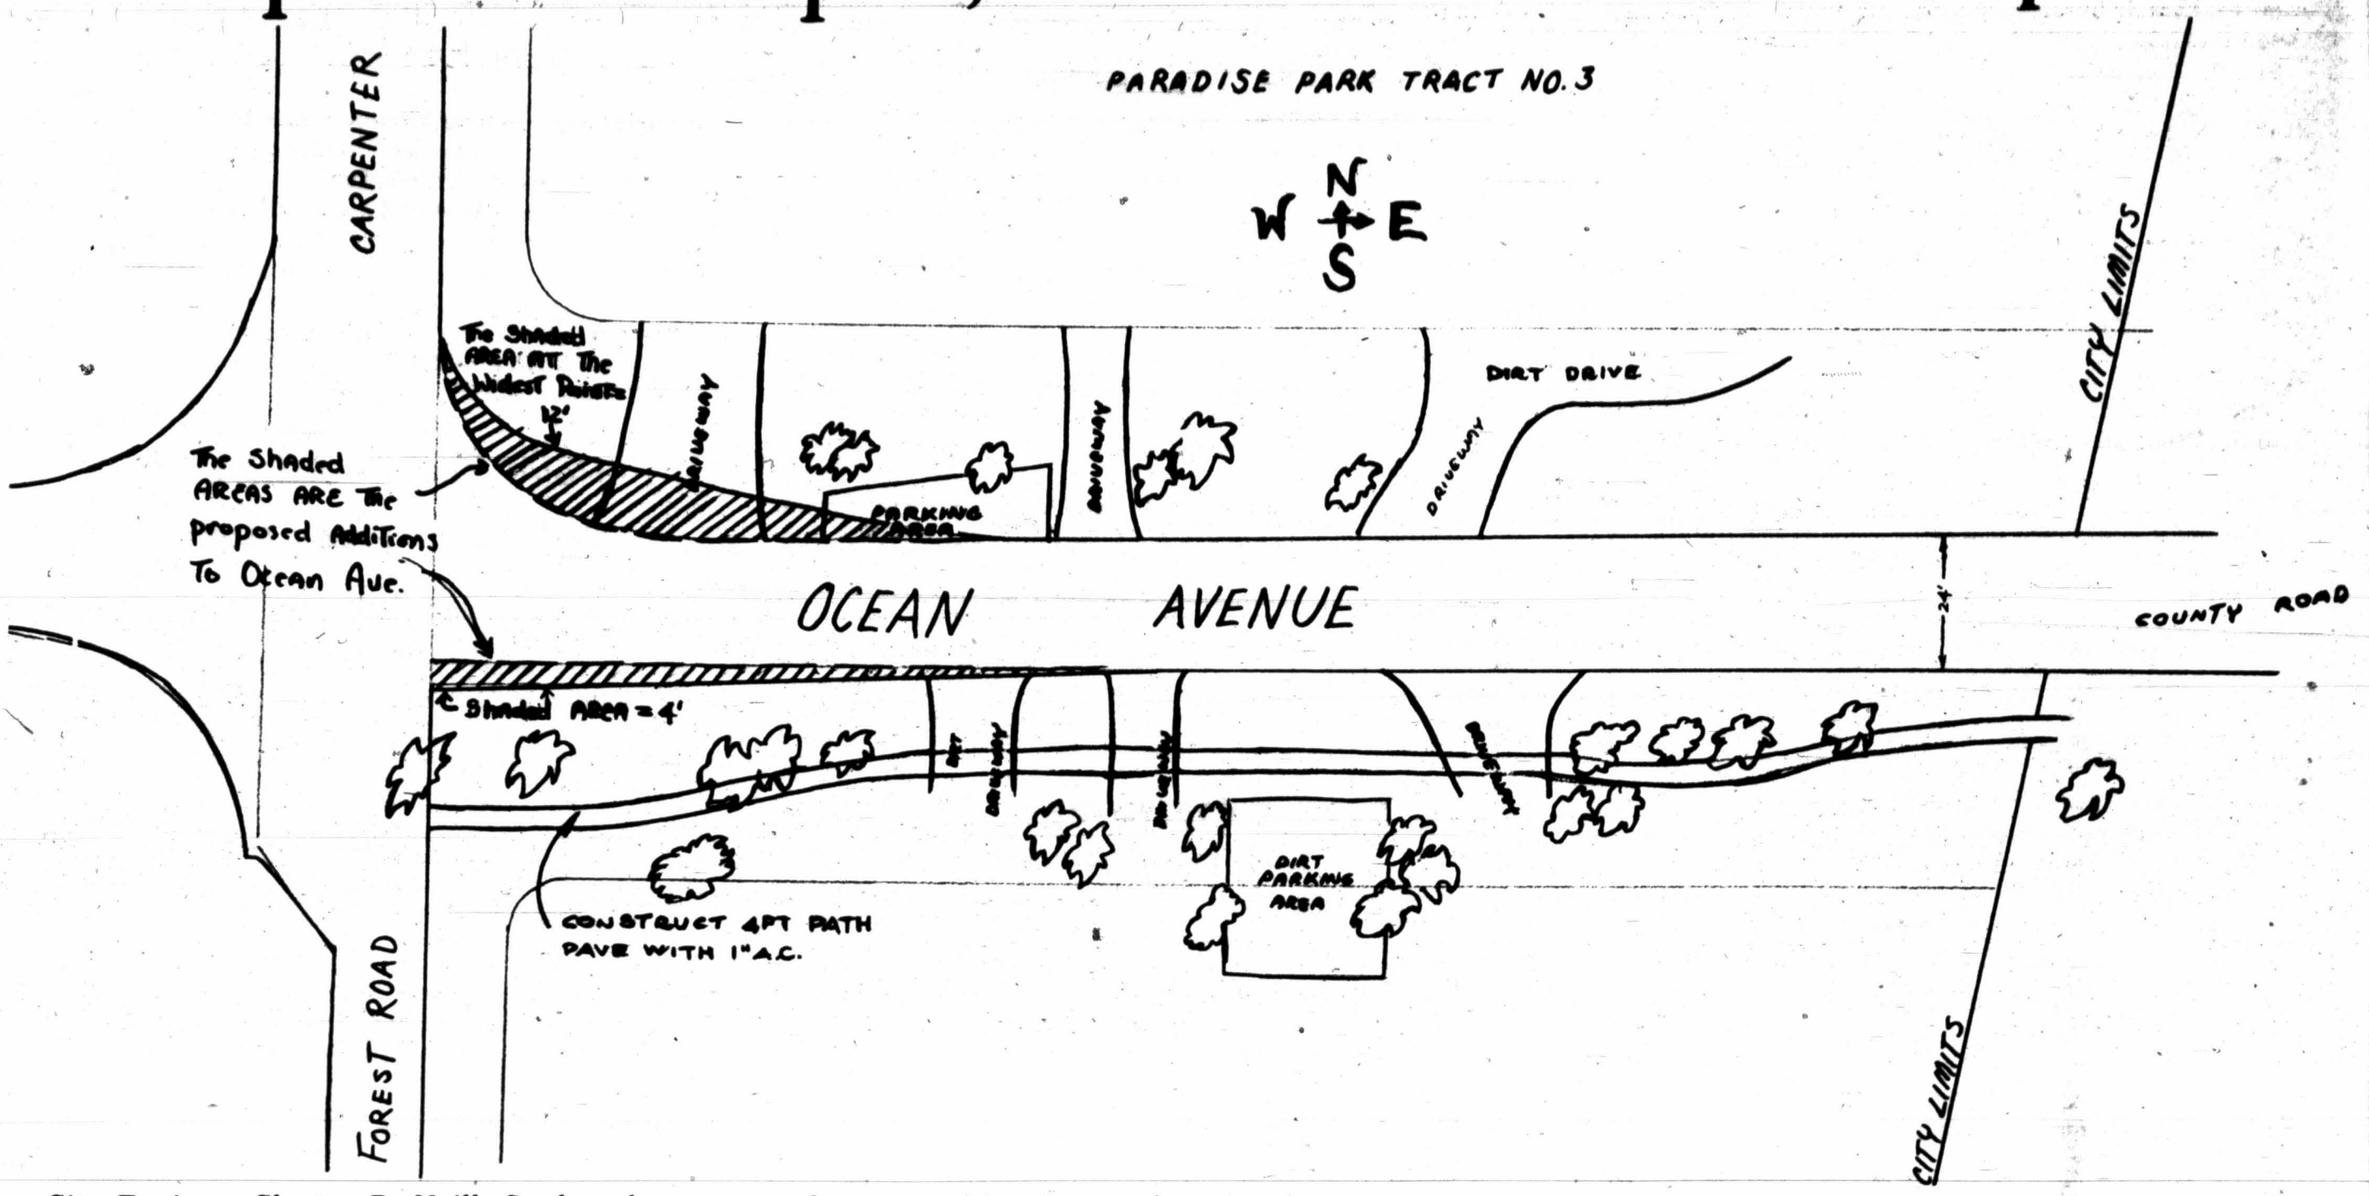
Proposal would repave, widen Ocean Avenue at Carpenter



City Engineer Clayton B. Neill, Sr. has drawn up and submitted plans to the City Council for the repaving of Ocean Avenue east of Carpenter to the city limits, one block away.

In addition to the repaving, the street would be widened at its juncture with Carpenter to allow for a right turn-off lane to ease the westbound traffic congestion at the intersection. The footpath running parallel to the avenue will also be repaved if the proposal is passed.

Councilman Frank Falge, a member of the land and improvements committee, told the PINE CONE that the proposal has been referred to his committee for study, and it will "very likely be a good while before any action is taken one way or the other." The tourist season is near and any construction would have to wait until fall.

Residents on the corner of Carpenter and Ocean listened calmly to the news that they may lose a few feet of front yard if the avenue is widened at the intersection.

"Well, it would simply mean that the cars would be that much closer to puff their nastiness at us," said one lady. "But at any rate, I don't see as there's anything we can do about it."
